

Aftermath of the Russian-Georgian War: Implications for Internal and External Actors

A lecture by Dr. Gayane Novikova

Founder & Director of the Spectrum Center for Strategic Analysis

Fellow at Harvard University's Dept. of Near Eastern Languages and Civilizations

The South Caucasus has been characterized as one of the most unstable post-Soviet regions since the early 1990's. The instability reached its peak in August 2008 when military action on Georgian territory caused drastic security changes in the South Caucasus. Dr. Novikova will discuss the obstacles facing regional cooperation for Armenia, Azerbaijan, Georgia, Turkey and Russia in the aftermath of the 2008 Russian-Georgian War.

International Affairs Building Room 707, the Lindsay Rogers Common Room

Thursday, October 8, 2009—6:30 pm

Contact Nanor Kebranian (nk2334@columbia.edu). Sponsored by the Dept. of Middle Eastern, South Asian, and African Studies, the Armenian Center at Columbia, the National Assoc. for Armenian Studies and Research, and the Middle East Institute. Free and open to the public.

